

For little dog too

Marc Jacobs metallic quilted tote bag goes from workout to dinner party. Available in black and silver at Marc by Marc Jacobs in Los Angeles, it sells for $68. A smaller version will be introduced in the spring.

GIVE 'EM A WORKOUT

In the land of the convertible, but not only in terms of cars and clothes. We're talking gear — hard-working, multi-functional pieces made of microfibers so advanced they wick away sweat with a quick left jab. Pants that can go from tai chi to hot yoga practice. Tote bags that can morph from workout to dinner party to pooch carrier. Here are some of the eco-friendly, ergonomic or just generally cool items expected to be flying off shelves this year.

— JANET CROMLEY AND JEANNINE STEIN

SAAM GABBAY

Hey, hey, yogi!

YogaWorks, which offers classes in Los Angeles, Orange County and New York, has released a line of yoga clothes, YogaWorks Private Label. Designed and tested by yogis, for yogis, with help from a bona-fide designer, the pieces are 12% Lycra and 88% cotton. This top is longer than usual to ensure coverage while staying close to the body. The tags are made from recycled paper. Available at YogaWorks studios, the top is $40, the pant is $45.